It's a cool summers night, you have your window open but don't feel the chilling night air under your blankets. Typing away at your laptop, writing another poem or short story, no pressure to please, just enjoying what you're doing. You have a list of 2010's dance hits playing on Spotify and you are filled with a comforting nostalgia. For a while you push aside the pending choices and changes, forget about your break-up and feel liberated, knowing after the showers passed, you'll wake to a fresh morning, dew on the green grass and fog hovering above the scenery. Nature awakes at four o'clock, the song of cheerful birds gently pulls you from your sleep and the first breath fills you with determination. You can do it. You'll be fine.

End Notes

Trying to find myself again
